Dr. Greene's Address-Death as Line Between Rivalry and Genuine Sorrow-President Sends Wreath.

In the hall of the House of Represe tatives, where he had served for thirty years, official Washington yesterday gathered at the hier of Representative Sereno E. Payne, of New York, who died in this city suddenly Thursday night. Mem-bers of the Cabinet, the United States Supreme Court and the two branches of Congress were in attendance. The serv-ices were impressive, and yet as simple as Mr. Pavne would have ordered had he been able to apeak. There, was a prayer, a brief address, two songs and a benediction.

The casket rested upon a catafalque in the well of the House, just in front of the Speaker's rostrum, where the late member made so many speeches in the years that he held the place as Republican floor leader.

Death Ends Rivairy.

The funeral oration was delivered by Rev. Dr. Samuel Greene, of the Cavalry Baptist Church. "There are some hours," he said, "when the sense of common loss is so great that we forget our little dif-ferences and in that hallowed light stand face to face with our better selves. It is one of the compensations of sorrow. This one of the composition of the place and the hour, is a splendid tribute to the memory of a great and good man, and an equal tribute to the better qualities of American manhood as represented here today. one of the compensations of sorrow.
